The Willie Lynch letter was proven to be a fraudulent creation long ago but the implications of the letter, and the messages contained within, could not be more relevant to the global events taking place in the world today. The letter exposes indoctrination and manipulation methods utilized by slave masters to keep their subjects under control. The Willie Lynch letter might not be real but everything within those words is true.

The Egregore will protect itself and embed itself in the collective subconscious of the group think tank. In other words, when an individual is accessing thoughts from a limiting belief system, and all systems have limitations, they utilize a confirmation bias compartmentalization technique in which they cannot access paradoxical information because the brain cannot make sense of it or process it. Conflicting information creates cognitive dissonance, which makes it easier for people to manipulate and control in such a vulnerable and susceptible state of being. So the Egregore does not control your thoughts but, rather, it controls the access you have to those thoughts. Access control to information builds and destroys empires and empires cannot have the breath of life if it does not have a strong Egregore.

Institutions aren't only built to serve the thriving posterity of the Egregore; they are built to ensure the growth of the entity. Empirical Egregores will not allow insider threats and the panopticon is impenetrable. Whistleblowers who abandon the Egregore are ostracized and outcasted from the group so that the Egregore is not threatened by paradoxical concepts that could alert the subjects of the Egregore that they are in fact being manipulated. The inmates that built the system are not allowed to see the flaws in the system they have created. This hubristic manifestation of collective self-defense mechanisms protects the authenticity and reverence of the Egregore. The Egregore is most effective and delivers more cortisol regulation and access to thoughts for protection to individuals who are called to service. Those who serve the panopticon Masters serve the system and will likely protect it, to the point of life or death. The Egregore will manipulate you into martyrdom and make you believe you are achieving the highest form of service, death before dishonor. The honor is that of the Egregore and this collective entity will purge itself of independent thoughts that threaten the sanctity of the body.
